INNOCENT MAN SENT TO PRISON

Wesley Thomas Pleaded Guilty to Another's Crime.

-FEARED THE REAL CULPRIT

WAS GRANTED A PARDON FROM PENITENTIARY YESTERDAY.

The state board of pardons at its regular monthly meeting yesterday extended clemency to but one applicant. Wesley Thomas, sentenced to four years for burglary from Uintah county last July, was given a full pardon. Thomas is a young man and he pleaded guilty to the charge. It developed later to the satisfaction of the authorities that he did not commit the crime, and that his actions at the trial were due to fear of the real guilty party.

The applications of Harry T. Duke,
Arnold Young, Harry Poole, Jack
Wilkenson and E. Johnson were continued one month.

nued one month. Frederick Von Falkenstein, serving one year from Salt Lake for forgery, was denied a commutation of sentence. Applications for pardon were denied Robert Lister and William Watson, serving four years for robbery at Ogden; George Lafferty, serving one year for forgery from Weber county, and Fay C. Herron, serving a one-year sen-tence from Tooele county.

Attorney M. D. Lessenger of Ogden appeared before the board in response to a summons in the cases of Watson to a summons in the cases of Watson and Lister. He was charged by the applicants at the last meeting of the hoard with a misappropriation of funds which they had furnished him for conducting their defense. Mr. Lessenger explained that he had agreed to defend them for $250, and had received but $190. This amount the defendants wanted him to use in securing a new trial but after they had secured other counsel this he refused to do,

TALKS TO TEACHERS

President Angell Gives Scholarly Address at Barratt Hall Yesterday.

President James B. Angell of the President James B. Angell of the University of Michigan made a most helpful, scholarly and practical talk to the teachers yesterday morning at Barratt hall. His subject was "The Reflex Effect of the Professions." Taking up first the three great professions, so-called—the law, medicine and the church, the greaker showed how each church—the speaker showed how each has its effect on the moral, mental and even the physical nature of man. We even the physical nature of man. We are all of us open epistles, as it were, he said, to those around us who have eyes to read. Our speech betrays us, and each unconscious act is showing day by day what our occupation is and whence we come.

The first disadvantage to the teacher is that his work is of a nature which.

But they will say if you ask them that popperton is the place.

er is that his work is of a nature which compels a limited line of study and tends to narrow his culture to the realm of the necessary alone. The number of teachers who study in advance of their profession is relatively small, and here the dancer from this course. and hence the danger from this cause is great. In the examination of a teacher there should be less of a question as to what he knows than as to, his ability to grow his ability to grow.

Another danger is the apparent monotony of the work. The same round of duties must be gone through with each day, and there is danger of a loss of the joy and enthusiasm which must take him out of the realm of vital affairs. In politics and in the great questions of the day he must have only a small part. But the pupils with whom he deals will have a large part in the outside life from which he is more or less of a recluse. He should not forget that he is training young people to take an active part in the people to take an active part in the great problems of life.

Another danger is that the teacher may wear an exaggerated professional air which he displays in his ultragrammatical language. It would seem that so exact is he in his speech that one may hear the grammar machinery inside him creaking; and he carries the impression that he is constantly suppressing himself lest he say "don't" for "do not," or "doesn't" for "does not."

After outlining the lll-effects liable to come from the teaching profession, the speaker made a splendid plea for

Of course I have the sympathy and prayers of many Christians, but it is wonderful what good pure food will do for one out of health, and why would it not be as good to keep one's health up? the good that may be found in the teacher's life. First is the daily stimulus of growing minds, which are the material with which he works. Another herefit other benefit to be derived is the constant stimulus of the diversity of his pupils. No two classes are alike, Year by year his work is varied and as he sees new beauties of mind and soul unfold he receives new life and thought.

Too, much time is spent in trying to make them all alike and in making averages of them.

The teaching profession cultivates patience—not the stolid indifference which tolerates faults that ought to be eradicated, but the sure patience which is content to await the fruits of labor well performed. It averages to make the sure patience which is content to await the fruits of labor well performed. well performed. It awakens true sym-pathy with youth and keeps fresh and active the forces of life. Association with the young is the true elixir of youth. No real teacher ever grows old. He keeps in close touch with the fountain of youth which surrounds nimer and drinks from its depths the magic waters. The teaching profession, by its limitations, tends to keep more circumspect the individual teacher.

Yesterday morning C. A. loss of the joy and enthusiasm which the teacher had in the beginning.

The teacher is more liable to conceit than are the members of other professions. He is unaccustomed to having any of his statements questioned, he is so given to having his little erudition wondered at, that he naturally overrates his own ability and sachlarship. In this respect he is exactly opposite to the lawyer, who knows that his keenest arguments are likely to be riddled by his brilliant opponent.
